Gaming czars quarrel over PH casino

AN AMERICAN gambling firm, using findings of a probe by a former head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, has accused Japanese gambling tycoon Kazuo Okada of making improper cash payments and gifts totaling about $110,000 to gaming regulators, including those in the Philippines.

The report alleged that Filipino regulators had received dinners, Chanel bags and suites at Wynn Macau, all courtesy of Okada, 69, chair of Universal Entertainment Corp., who made his fortune off pachinko machines, a cross between pinball and slots.

Universal Entertainment through subsidiary Tiger Resorts, Leisure and Entertainment Inc. broke ground on Jan. 26 at the 12-hectare Pagcor Entertainment City on Manila Bay that the Philippine government hopes will become Manila's answer to the Las Vegas strip.

Okada's group and three others were awarded by state-owned Philippine Amusement and Gaming Corp. (Pagcor) with a contract to build a hotel-resort complex in the Entertainment City during the incumbency of Efraim Genuino, Pagcor chair during the Arroyo

Amlac linked to exposé of Corona bank accounts

By Cathy C. Yamsuan and Christian V. Esguerra

PERSONNEL of the Anti-Money Laundering Council (Amlac) may have leaked photocopies of the signature cards of Chief Justice Renato Corona initially kept in a branch of Philippine Savings Bank in Quezon City.

This possibility surfaced on the 20th day of Corona's trial at the Senate impeachment court.

Senate President Juan Ponce Enrile yesterday noted that apart from authorized PSBank officials and personnel, only representatives of Amlac and Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) were able to scrutinize Corona's signature cards up close.

PSBank president Pascual Garcia III said Amlac had even asked for photocopies of Corona's signature cards taken from the Katipunan branch during an audit.

Garcia recalled that from September to November 2010, a combined team of BSP and Amlac representatives conducted a bank-wide audit of PSBank records.

Garcia noted that while the BSP regularly conducted audits

"We advise them to be more discreet in what they say [and] to be more prudent in what they tell the people," Tagbilaran Bishop Leonardo Medroso said on Church-run Radio Veritas.

Stars gather in Las Vegas to honor Ali

LAS VEGAS—A casino owner paid more than a million dollars for boxing gloves Muhammad Ali used to defend his title. Samuel L. Jackson dedicated a rendition of "Stand By Me" to the boxer. And US President Barack Obama told the icon in a birthday tribute that he inspired the world.

By the end of the night, all Ali needed to do to capture the hearts of 2,000 revelers in Las Vegas on Saturday was go onstage and smile.

The birthday gala—with tickets starting at $1,500 per plate—was held at the MGM Grand, the site of many of boxing's major fights the past two decades.

SC writes finis to Lenny Villa case

By Jerome C. Aning

THE SUPREME Court has set aside the conviction for homicide of Aquila Legis Juris fraternity member Fidelito Dizon and instead found him guilty of a lesser offense of reckless imprudence that resulted in the death of Leonardo "Lenny" Villa 21 years ago during the organization's initiation rites.

The high tribunal said four other fraternity members—Antonio Mariano Almeda, Junel Anthony Ama, Renato Bantug Jr. and Vincent Tecson—were also guilty, like Dizon, of reckless imprudence resulting in homicide.

The court's second division, chaired by Associate Justice Ma. Lourdes Sereno, set aside the original conviction by the lower court—Dizon for homicide and Almeda, Ama, Bantug and Tecson

'Stop portraying solons as crooks in films, TV'

By Gil Cabacungan

THIS LAWMAKER has had enough.

Dismayed by shows portraying members of Congress as fat, foul-mouthed politicians clad in ill-fitting clothes, Pampanga Rep. Aurelio "Dong" Gonzales Jr. has filed a resolution appealing to film and TV producers to "stop typecasting congressmen and congresswomen as villains or crooks in movies and telenovelas."

Gonzales proposed House Resolution No. 2148 urging producers "not to create stereotypes or negative public perception against members of the House of Representatives."

Gonzales, a member of the Nationalist People's Coalition who left the minority bloc to join the majority group, said congressmen could only make an appeal because "This issue is covered by the constitutionally guaranteed

C Guard saves 9 Viet fishers off Palawan

THE PHILIPPINE Coast Guard (PCG) yesterday said it rescued nine Vietnamese fishermen off the coast of Palawan after their vessel drifted to shallow waters due to bad weather over the weekend.

Reports reaching the PCG showed the fishing vessel, the Quq PH 12, encountered rough weather on Saturday, causing it to drift to Rovero Island southwest of Palawan and north of Bugsuk Island.

Commodore [illegible] Evangelista, Palawan Coast Guard District commander, directed search and rescue operations after the PCG action center in Manila and the Vietnam Search and Rescue Coordination Center reported the incident at 4:30 a.m. Saturday.

Those rescued were identified as boat captain Bui Viet Anh, Bui Quoc Trung, Vo Hung, Pham Quoc Vinh, Nguyen Van Phuoc, Luong Khanh, Nguyen Tam, Truong Van Hoang and Nguyen Van Tu.

Evangelista said initial investigation showed no major damage to the vessel which was loaded with water and ice. The fishermen could not explain how they ended up within the Philippines' area of responsibility since none of them could speak English, said the Coast Guard officer.

Evangelista said it was suspicious how the fishermen ended up in Palawan. He said they will be turned over to the Palawan Committee on Illegal Entrants for processing and for further investigation.

Japan 'very pleased' with Jpepa–embassy

By Jerry E. Esplanada

JAPAN is very pleased with the economic thrusts of the Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement (Jpepa), which has made "significant strides" since it came into force in 2008, according to the Japanese Embassy in Pasay City.

Kenji Hirai, the embassy media and information officer, yesterday cited, among other things, the "very encouraging" trade and investment relations between Tokyo and Manila.

That is, "despite the global economic crisis and the difficult economic situation that Japan and the Philippines have to face during these times," Hirai told the Inquirer.

Hirai said the Japanese government expects that "the smooth and effective implementation of Jpepa will lead to enhanced trade and investment relations between the two countries, which will further benefit and invigorate the Philippine economy."

"The Japanese government hopes the economic relations between the two countries will continue to develop in 2012 based on the recent positive trend of expansion in both trade and investment under Jpepa," he said.

Hirai noted that the "trade volume between the two countries increased in 2010, compared to 2009."

"Philippine exports to Japan rose from $6.21 billion in 2009 to $7.8 billion in 2010, pushing Japan back to the position of biggest importer. Philippine imports from Japan grew from $5.35 billion in 2009 to $6.77 billion in 2010, (also) maintaining Japan as the biggest exporter," he said.

Japan "remains the biggest investor in the Philippines with total investments of P16.5 billion in 2010. In the past few years, we considered Japanese direct investment in the Philippines amounted to P303.8 billion," said Hirai.

According to the embassy official, Japan "continues to make every effort to smoothly implement the Jpepa through the active utilization of its joint committee and subcommittees (on the pact)."

Joint committee meetings

"Japan and the Philippines will have joint committee meetings, the last of which was held in February 2011 that wrapped up the results of the subcommittee meetings... Both governments are currently in consultation regarding the schedules of relevant subcommittee meetings and the next joint committee meeting. Concrete dates have yet to be confirmed," he said.

Last year, Jpepa subcommittees "conducted meetings on trade in goods, investment, rules of origin, movement of persons and improvement of the business environment," Hirai said.

Happy to see good results

In January 2011, then Japanese Ambassador to the Philippines Makoto Katsura said they were "happy to see very good results since the entry into force of the Jpepa."

Katsura cited the growth of Philippine exports to Japan, which he called a "tangible result of the entry into force of Jpepa."

The envoy expressed confidence Tokyo and Manila would work toward full implementation of the pact, which was signed on Sept. 9, 2006, in Helsinki, Finland, by then President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo and then Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi.

Two years later, the Jpepa was ratified by the Philippine Senate.

Earlier, the pact spawned controversy pertaining to its provisions prohibiting the transport of toxic wastes to either country and on the recruitment of Filipino health care workers to Japan.

Jpepa aims to, among other things, liberalize and facilitate trade in goods and services between the two countries, increase investment opportunities, enhance protection of intellectual property, promote transparency in government procurement, and establish a framework for further bilateral cooperation and improvement of the Philippine business environment.

Messenger with Porsche hit over SALN entries

By Nancy C. Carvajal

THE ANTIGRAFT body of the Department of Finance (DOF) has filed charges against a Porsche-driving customs clerk who was accused of beating up a student and firing shots at him during a traffic altercation last month.

In a complaint it filed with the Office of the Ombudsman last week, the Revenue Integrity Protection Service (RIPS) charged Paulino C. Elevado IV—a messenger of the Bureau of Customs (BOC)—with administrative and criminal charges for owning assets that he could not have obtained through his salary and which were not listed in his Statements of Assets, Liabilities and Net worth (SALN).

Police records showed that Elevado punched a student driving a Toyota Innova after the latter bumped his Porsche on the South Luzon Expressway on Jan. 21. He also fired shots at the 20-year-old student's vehicle when the latter drove away.

Elevado was subsequently charged with frustrated murder and physical injuries. The police also revoked his gun license.

"Plainly, respondent's reckless demeanor ... betrays his propensity to be a self-aggrandizing person who suffers from lack of consideration for other people which should not at all be countenanced," RIPS said.
